

Dear FCC,

I am a concerned citizen. I believe that certain actors from certain companies (like Ajit Pai from Verizon) are NOT acting in the interest of the consumer. They are acting selfishly only to help themselves, and if you let them, they will hurt the consumer, who will otherwise be helpless and powerless if net neutrality rules are removed. Please do not remove the protections that are in place to protect millions of people like me and small companies who could otherwise be discriminated against by internet providers because they are not in the "good ol' boys club," because they don't have enough influence, or because they don't have enough money to sway whether or not they will get adequate bandwidth.

I hope that you truly have consumer protection at the heart of your mission and intention and continue to protect net neutrality.

Thank you.

Sarah Kane
